

IMAGINE A DAY IN YOUR LIFE

As a Concordia University-Portland
Online MEd Student

A major concern teachers have when it comes to pursuing a master's degree is this: "I'm already busy." But the truth is, more than 10,000 Concordia University-Portland graduates have fit our MEd program into their schedules. And guess what? You can too.

6:00 AM

Zzzz...
You wake up and go through your typical Tuesday morning routine: shower, dress, get the kids ready.

7:00 AM

While eating breakfast, you quickly log into BlackBoard to check out your grade on last week's paper and your professor's feedback.

8:00 AM

Off you go to the elementary school, where your kids go to kindergarten and you teach 3rd grade.

10:00 AM

During your planning period, you grade a few assignments and catch up with a coworker. Then, back to teaching.

12:00 NOON

Lunchtime! You log back into BlackBoard to read through your peers' responses to the discussion question, knowing you'll really dig into them tonight.

2:00 PM

In your afternoon class, you apply the new instructional method you wrote your paper on last week and notice your students seem much more engaged. (It's working!)

4:00 PM

After dismissal, you take one minute before coaching volleyball practice to check email. You're happy to see that a peer in your cohort emailed you about a topic you both found really interesting in class.

6:00 PM

Back home while cooking dinner, you think of a great idea for your final paper due Saturday, but just make a mental note. Your personal rule: no work until the kids are in bed. Right now, it's all about them.

8:00 PM

Once they're asleep, you lesson plan, research that idea you had, and write your peer responses. Then you get ahead by working on your second discussion question, so you can take tomorrow night off to go out to dinner.

10:30 PM

Just before winding down, you see an email from your Student Services advisor saying that it's time to renew your funding options. Good reminder! You message your financial aid contact to chat next week.

11:00 PM

Zzzzz...
And that's a wrap! Off to bed you go... where you dream of walking across the stage for graduation, master's degree in hand, just one year from now.
